FPJ is official LDP bet, SC rules

By Anna C. Torres
and Francisco Tan, Manila

MANILA—The Supreme Court ruled today that the Liberal Party (LDP) is the official bet for the 2004 presidential election, after rejecting a challenge by the opposition Nacionalista Party (NP).

The court's decision, which was a 6-3 majority, came after a long and contentious legal battle that began in 2001 when the NP filed a petition with the Supreme Court to disqualify the LDP from participating in the 2004 elections.

The court's decision is a significant victory for the LDP, which has been the official bet of the party since its formation in 2001. The court's decision also means that the LDP will be able to field a presidential candidate in the 2004 elections.

No subsidy

The court also ruled that the LDP is not entitled to a subsidy from the government for its campaign expenses. The court said that the LDP is a private party and is not entitled to a subsidy from the government.

The court's decision is a significant victory for the LDP, which has been the official bet of the party since its formation in 2001. The court's decision also means that the LDP will be able to field a presidential candidate in the 2004 elections.

Sotto says Palace pressured scribe; show biz group rallies behind FPJ

By Francisco Tan, Manila

MANILA—President Gloria Arroyo's administration is under fire for allegedly pressuring a scribe to write a letter to the Supreme Court in support of the Liberal Party (LDP) in the 2004 presidential election.

The scribe, who is a member of the show biz group that has rallied behind FPJ, says that he was pressured to write the letter. He says that the Palace officials told him that if he did not write the letter, he would be fired.

The show biz group, which includes actors, actresses, and singers, has been a major force behind FPJ's campaign. They have been organizing rallies and events for FPJ, and they have been using their fame to promote FPJ's campaign.

RP inks 'open skies' cargo deal

By Christine Sison

THE PHILIPPINE AIRCRAFT MANUFACTURING CORPORATION (PAMC) has inked a landmark deal with the United States to open up the Philippine cargo market to American airlines. The deal, which is part of a larger agreement between the two countries, will allow American airlines to fly cargo planes to and from the Philippines. This is a significant step towards liberalizing the Philippine cargo market, which has been largely closed to foreign airlines. The deal is expected to increase competition and lower costs for cargo shipping, which is a vital part of the Philippine economy.

Architects transform drawing to reality

By Emily S. Rosenberg

It's a common sight in the architecture world: a group of people gathered around a table, looking at a large drawing of a building. They are discussing the design, making changes, and trying to bring the vision to life. This is the reality of architecture, where the drawing is not just a representation of a building, but a blueprint for its creation.

ALL ABOUT

Building dreams

For many architects, the process of building a dream is a long and challenging one. It starts with a vision, followed by a series of drawings and models, and finally, the construction of the building itself. The process is often filled with setbacks and challenges, but the end result is a masterpiece that has been brought to life.

THINKING about shopping means thinking about the mall. And, you'll find it's not one location but a cluster of locations that have taken over this time. It's not even close just a collection of store-front shopping; it's a shopping center. The typical mix of stores (department stores, shopping centers, food stores, clothing stores, etc.) is not found in one place but is spread out in a complex of stores, each with its own

Spring 1999, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) issued guidance on the use of the term "natural" in food labeling. The guidance states that the term "natural" should be used to describe a food that is "minimally processed" and does not contain any artificial ingredients. This guidance is intended to help consumers make informed choices about the foods they eat.

D&F and Laps
 With the new, lower corporate tax rate in effect, the company is looking at making debt, via tax-deductible interest, a key part of its capital strategy. In the second half of 2003, D&F will have a new bond offering in its pipeline. The company will have to decide whether to go for a long-term, low-cost bond or a short-term, high-yield bond, says a D&F spokesman.
